

Lucy Melchior (She/her) is a rising eighth grader at a private school in Princeton, New Jersey. In fifth grade, she persevered to ban plastic straws from her school by creating a powerpoint presentation, explaining the harm plastic does to sea creatures and the environment. She also takes part in Student Government at her school. Lucy joined Connecting with Humanity as a guest contributor to utilize her writing skills and to advocate for human rights. She also joined this youth group to speak about current events and to spread awareness regarding environmental sustainability. Outside of school, Lucy enjoys playing tennis, singing, writing, and learning Manarin. She hopes to be a Pathologist or an Obstetrician when she grows up, and she is very interested in biology!
